1. Protect the Business

Use strong account security

TOP PRIORITY

- Enable multi-factor authentication for hosting, domain, Supabase, Stripe, and business email accounts.
- Give each team member an individual account. Never share one administrator password.
- Grant only the access each person needs and remove access immediately when responsibilities change.
- Store recovery codes in a secure password manager controlled by the business owner.

Keep secrets out of source code

Stripe secret keys and environment files must never be committed, placed in public storage, or shared in chat. Production secrets belong in the hosting provider's encrypted environment settings. If a key is exposed, rotate it immediately.

Operate Stripe safely

- Use test mode whenever changing the booking flow.
- Verify the price, currency, description, customer email, and refund process before enabling live payments.
- Enable Stripe account alerts and review failed or disputed payments promptly.
- Restrict Stripe team permissions; financial and developer access do not need to be identical.

Back up what cannot be recreated

Keep regular copies of the source delivery, database content, service images, legal text, and key account recovery information. Test recovery at least twice per year; an untested backup is only an assumption.

Fast security routine: once each month, review admin users, hosting collaborators, Stripe team members, domain renewal status, failed login activity, and dependency updates.

2. Keep Information Accurate

Review high-impact details first

Visa requirements, processing times, salaries, fees, insurance information, and government procedures can change. Add a clear “last reviewed” date to operational content and verify it against authoritative sources.

Use a consistent service-page formula

1. Who it is for: target applicant and eligibility.
2. What is included: precise scope of assistance.
3. Documents: a structured checklist with exceptions noted.
4. Expected process: realistic stages and estimated time.
5. Costs: professional fee, government fee, and third-party costs clearly separated.
6. Next step: one obvious appointment or enquiry action.

Avoid promises the business cannot control

Use wording such as “estimated,” “subject to authority review,” and “eligibility assessment required.” Do not imply guaranteed visas, jobs, approval dates, or government outcomes.

Build trust with evidence

- Publish authentic testimonials only with permission.
- Show a real business address, monitored phone number, professional email, and response hours.
- Explain the consultation process and what the fee covers before payment.
- Keep legal pages current: privacy notice, terms, refund/cancellation policy, and cookie information where applicable.

Content rule: if a visitor could lose money or miss a deadline because a statement is wrong, assign an owner and a review date to that statement.

3. Improve Visibility and Conversion

Target useful search intent

Create focused service pages around genuine client questions, such as country + permit type, eligibility, documents, cost, and process. Each page should have a unique title, summary, primary heading, and helpful body content rather than repeated wording.

Strengthen local and international discovery

- Keep the business name, address, and phone number consistent across the website and verified listings.
- Create and maintain a Google Business Profile if the business is eligible.
- Use descriptive image filenames and alternative text; compress large images before upload.
- Connect Google Search Console and submit the production sitemap after launch.
- Monitor which countries, services, and queries generate qualified enquiries—not only total visits.

Make every call to action specific

“Book a consultation” is clearer than “Learn more” when the desired next step is paid advice. Near the action, state the price, duration, what is included, and cancellation terms.

Reduce booking hesitation

- Explain what happens immediately after payment.
- Send a clear confirmation containing the selected date, time, timezone, contact channel, and support details.
- Show available times in an explicit timezone to avoid international scheduling errors.
- Provide a human support route if payment succeeds but confirmation is not received.

Measure the full funnel: service-page view → booking start → successful payment → attended consultation → retained client. Visits alone do not show business value.

4. Run a Simple Maintenance Rhythm

Frequency	Recommended checks
Weekly	Test the contact route, inspect new enquiries, review failed payments, confirm booking price, and spot-check the most visited service pages.
Monthly	Review account access, update changing service information, check analytics and search performance, test mobile navigation, and install reviewed dependency updates.
Quarterly	Complete a full desktop/mobile journey, test a Stripe payment and refund, review legal wording, export important data, and assess performance and accessibility.
Annually	Review domain renewal, hosting plan, third-party costs, disaster recovery, privacy obligations, brand content, and account ownership.

Test after every meaningful change

- Run `npm run build` before production deployment.
- Check the changed page at narrow mobile, tablet, and desktop widths.
- Confirm keyboard navigation, visible focus, readable contrast, form labels, and helpful errors.
- Test admin authorization separately from merely being signed in.
- Verify service edits appear correctly on both listing and detail pages.

Keep an operational record

Maintain a lightweight change log with the date, what changed, who approved it, and how it was tested. For pricing, legal text, and regulated information, this record is especially valuable.

Best first improvements: establish client-owned accounts, add legal policies, define the appointment timezone and confirmation workflow, connect search/analytics tools, and schedule monthly content reviews.
